

Today's greatest challenges are inherently complex and operate at the confluence of society, technology, ecology, and the materiality of our constructed and natural environments. These challenges require the capacity think synthetically, to design and plan our shared future. The UVA School of Architecture emphasizes diverse perspectives and collaborative action - addressing global and human health, community engagement, infrastructural networks, cultural preservation, race and social justice, ecological resilience, innovative design technologies and more. Our diverse modes of research, across architecture, architectural history, landscape architecture, urban design and urban and environmental planning, are committed to knowledge, stewardship, and transformation of the world around us.

At UVA School of Architecture, we have identified themes that articulate the collective work of our faculty, students, and collaborators. These themes also shape our impact areas, our priorities, our curricular foci, and our public programs. UVA School of Architecture constitutes a platform for the advancement of design research through investigative, critical, innovative, imaginative, and rigorous inquiry.
